Week In Review

Again, this week I failed at getting all my work in on time. I failed to complete my SWOT review. At this point I would probably be fired if this was my actual job. Praise the Lord that I already have a job. This week at my job I also pushed a commit up that didn't even compile, and then my Friday was wasted trying to get my computer working from home properly.

Reflect and Connect:

I am happy that this class is over, because I do not do well in classes that I don't feel add to my ability to do my job. I feel so far that the only course that has done that has been Scalable Data Infrastructures and I am so happy that the next class that I will be taking is the advanced course. It is hard for me to focus on things that aren't directly programming related or that I can't make an algorithm for. I am also going into my second sprint with my new company and I am hoping to build and learn more with the company as I continue on.
