Week In Review
I failed this week at making sure that I had everything in on time. Everything else went well this week. I got all my other work in on time. I installed a new flowchart software and created a flowchart for the first time in a long time. My job let me get waist deep into the platform and I have been learning a lot about AngularJS, C#, and SQL. I started the loan process on a house and learned just how much paper work is involved in buying a home. I also pulled back on getting a second car due to buying the house.

Reflect and Connect:
I don't feel that the work that I am adding to the github account fits my flowchart, in the fact that most of the stuff that I have put on there for this class does not directly relate to my degree. I also know that people in my line of work scour the internet for information on the people that they hire, and some of the things that I submitted, they don't need to know or find. It also doesn't show that I am a good developer, which from my experience seems to have a direct correlation to years in the industry. If you don't have at least 10 years in the industry, then you aren't worth anything.
